

In my opinion, the FCC should not approve cellular telephone use by passengers aboard commercial aircraft flights. Exceptions might be made for airline staff and security personnel usage, and for passenger usage in the event of a bona fide emergency. The reason for my opinion is that the inevitable added noise pollution within the crowded conditions of today's flights would seem most undesirable.